

Andrew Barnfield

I am married to Kate and we have two boys: one in Y1/2 and the other in Reception. I became a Parent Governor in November 2014 and sit on the School Improvement Committee.

I've worked in central and local government since graduating with a degree in Modern History from the University of East Anglia. I recently started at the Cabinet Office's 'Government Digital Service', working on data policy and legislation. For nearly 10 years prior to that I worked in the 14-19 education sector, firstly at the Learning and Skills Council and latterly for the London Borough of Hillingdon. I have extensive project and programme management experience and am used to working with education data to help schools, colleges and training organisations improve performance for the benefit of every child. I became a parent governor as I want to support the school in being the best it can be and supporting our children to achieve their potential.
